

NADIA TRAINAR

Has been engaging in ICT policies for several years, leveraging on a diverse and international experience. Graduated from ENST Bretagne (telecom engineering school) and Sciences Po Paris (Master in European Affairs), she began her career working with incumbent international carriers (France Telecom in Canada) and alternative Service Providers (9 Telecom, now part of SFR). She then moved to a leading technology provider (Schlumberger) with responsibilities encompassing strategic analysis, marketing or pre-sales activities. Afterwards, she was hired to promote private/public good practices within an independent organization advising local authorities. Appointed European affairs advisor at ARCEP in 2008, her major involvements include leading the revised telecom framework negotiations and implementation, and since November 2009 the net neutrality project.